Jim Richerson, Group Director of Kohler Golf, today released the following statement regarding the Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources issue of a draft Environmental Impact Statement concerning Kohler Co.'s proposed golf course:

“The environmental review process continues to move forward with the release of the DNR’s draft Environmental Impact Statement. Overall, we believe the science and facts of the Statement confirm the project can meet applicable standards, reflecting a minimalist design and a responsible approach while providing a major economic boost for the community. We look forward to hearing what the public has to say at the DNR’s July 20 public hearing at Sheboygan Falls High School.

“Our record at Whistling Straits, Blackwolf Run and our facilities worldwide demonstrate a belief that good business and environmental enhancement can work hand-in-hand. We look forward to improving even further the project design in response to constructive feedback. We will work with the DNR and the community to help ensure this golf course opens private land to the public for the first time, while respecting the site’s history and natural character.”
